

Journey to wholeness and empowerment

"It's difficult to heal your body if you don't heal completely in the mind, body and spirit. I learned that for me, the key to healing is learning the balance between allowing yourself to feel what you are feeling – the grief, fear, anger, hope – and finding the gift and lesson in each illness or surgery."

Cheryl Salter's journey to healing began when she became her own health care advocate

After a routine surgery in March 2003, Cheryl Salter knew something was seriously wrong. Far from a normal recovery, Salter experienced severe pain, a 104-degree fever and sepsis—a potentially life-threatening condition in which the immune system responds to an infection. Her instincts were accurate: she had suffered an accidental bowel perforation during the surgery.

After a long series of surgeries to try to correct the situation, Salter found her way to Abbott Northwestern where she underwent a corrective surgery. There, two surgeons simultaneously operated on her. The reconstruction was as successful as possible, but the nerve pain and feelings of illness from the original perforation still lingered.

A nurse for 36 years, Salter was no stranger to health care. "After my first surgery, I knew I was really sick and my intent was to get healthy and stay healthy," said Salter. "When one of the surgeons at Abbott Northwestern who operated to repair my abdomen suggested that I seek integrative care from the Penny George Institute, I didn't hesitate."

When she made her first appointment at the Penny George Institute for Health and Healing Outpatient Clinic, Salter was anxious, tearful and discouraged. "When I walked in the door, I was immediately cared for at all levels," explained Salter. As part of her care plan, she saw Mark Roa, MA, LPsych, for biofeedback, and Robert Decker, RPh, Lac, for acupuncture. Through biofeedback, she learned to take greater responsibility for her mental, physical, emotional and spiritual health.

After feeling medically traumatized, Salter initially hesitated to experience acupuncture, but eventually found it to be healing and empowering. "The professionals were understanding and worked with me beautifully to empower my healing and helped me to be in charge of my health," said Salter.

Through individual appointments with a certified yoga therapist, Salter also learned to use yoga as a way to support her healing process. "Megan Hatch, my yoga therapist, recorded a tape for me to do yoga at home," said Salter. "Through integrative care, I quit being the victim and learned that I was a strong, powerful person." She also benefitted from appointments with one of the Penny George Institute's nutritionists and an integrative medicine physician. "The team at the Penny George Institute works so well together, I didn't have to repeat my traumatic story each time I had a visit," said Salter.

MEDICAL MASSAGE THERAPY

On an inpatient and outpatient basis, medical massage therapy offers patients many benefits

At the Penny George Institute, medical massage therapy may be used as one component of a patient's overall integrative care plan. Medical massage services are customized to each patient and provided by professionals who are certified by the National Certification Board for Therapeutic Massage and Bodywork, the highest level of credentialing in the state of Minnesota for massage therapists.

"There are big differences in the medical massage therapy services at the Penny George Institute versus what a client would receive elsewhere," said Jeremy Miller, LMT-WV, NCTMB, medical massage therapist. "We work as a team with other practitioners and adapt our work to suit the medical condition of each patient, so our massages are highly customized."

For hospitalized patients at Abbott Northwestern, medical massage may be recommended as part of an overall plan to address pain, anxiety, stress, nausea, sleeping problems or coping with changes in health. The reasons for medical massage vary across the hospital. For example, in Abbott Northwestern's Birth Center, medical massage may be ordered for patients to help maintain or prolong a pregnancy and prevent pre-term delivery.

Medical massage is offered in combination with other integrative therapies including acupuncture, acupressure, energy healing/healing touch, guided imagery, integrative nursing consultation, music therapy, reflexology and relaxation techniques.

As an example, if a hospitalized patient has low blood platelets, the pressure used will be extremely light. Or, if a patient's blood pressure is extremely low, the massage will often be rescheduled at a more suitable time. Each patient receives individualized care, developed in partnership with the patient's care team to enhance his or her care experience and outcomes.

For massages at the Outpatient Clinic, medical massage therapy services are also tailored to specific medical conditions. The Institute's medical massage therapists are experienced in treating patients with cancer, chronic pain, orthopedic issues, fibromyalgia, arthritis and other conditions.

At the Penny George Institute's Outpatient Clinics at Abbott Northwestern and Unity hospitals, patients complete a health and medical history form and work with the medical massage therapist to create a plan before starting each session. According to massage therapist Ann Stocker, NCTMB, BS, each practitioner carefully considers any medical issues, diagnoses, recent injuries or surgeries, medical treatments, contraindications, symptoms, medications, pain, anxiety and stress levels and tailors each session accordingly.

Medical massage therapy techniques might include: trigger point therapy, deep tissue, craniosacral therapy, myofascial release, stretching and scar tissue mobilization techniques, massage for patients with cancer or pregnant women, Swedish or Esalen massage, reflexology, healing touch and relaxation techniques. An evaluation with each patient before massage therapy begins helps the therapist to identify individual patient and session goals, and which techniques might be incorporated.

BY THE NUMBERS

Inpatient medical massage therapy sessions at Abbott Northwestern in 2010: 4,715

Number of medical massage therapy sessions at the Penny George Institute's Outpatient Clinic in 2010: 943

- Increasing range of motion and flexibility
- Reducing or eliminating pain, stress or anxiety
- Improving blood circulation and lymphatic flow
- Relieving muscle spasms, tension and stiffness
- Increasing comfort and relaxation
- Restoring musculoskeletal movement of soft tissues to reduce or eliminate pain or dysfunction

Journey to wholeness and empowerment

In November 2008, Salter was diagnosed with early stage breast cancer and underwent treatment at Abbott Northwestern's Piper Breast Center. "Before my surgery, I sought out the services of the Penny George Institute including guided imagery, healing touch and acupuncture. Integrative therapies also helped me deal with the side effects of radiation following the surgery," said Salter.

Although she still suffers from pain, Salter has learned to address that crippling fear of pain and tensing that often leads to more pain. "It's difficult to heal your body if you don't heal completely in the mind, body and spirit," said Salter. "I learned that for me, the key to healing is learning the balance between allowing yourself to feel what you are feeling—the grief, fear, anger, hope—and finding the gift and lesson in each illness or surgery."

Professionally, Salter has found that her journey of healing has helped her be present for the patients and families she cares for as a registered nurse at Children's Hospitals and Clinics. In addition, she recently completed her certification as a healing touch practitioner.

"This has been a wonderful journey," said Salter. "I know what it feels like to be terribly ill and in persistent pain. The rest of my life will be dedicated to helping others who are sick, scared and in need of healing."

The Penny George Institute expands to the Unity Hospital campus

Residents and employees in the northwestern Twin Cities region now have convenient access to many of the Penny George Institute for Health and Healing's outpatient services.

"All of my appointments are in one building, which I find wonderfully easy and comforting. The atmosphere is so warm and friendly. I am thrilled to have this facility so close to home and easy to access."

DONNA WILSON
Fridley Resident

The Penny George Institute has a new location in the Fridley Medical Center on the Unity Hospital campus. The services offered there can help individuals optimize their health whether they are suffering from a disease, recovering from an illness, dealing with chronic condition or wanting to get fit and healthy.

"We are pleased to expand our services to the Unity Hospital campus," said Lori Knutson, RN, BSN, HN-BC, executive director of the Penny George Institute. "This demonstrates Allina's commitment to integrative care as a standard of practice."

Donna Wilson, a resident of Fridley since 1966, is a breast cancer survivor and has worked with the rehabilitation professionals at Sister Kenny Rehabilitation Institute in the Fridley Medical Center for the past year. Following chemotherapy and radiation, Wilson was diagnosed with lymphedema – a condition of fluid retention and tissue swelling.

To assist with the pain and swelling caused by the lymphedema, Wilson was introduced to acupuncture and medical massage therapy services offered at the Penny George Institute. Following a discussion of nutrition issues with her Sister Kenny therapist, she also sought out an appointment with an integrative nutritionist at the Penny George Institute. "All of my appointments are in one building, which I find wonderfully easy and comforting," said Wilson. "The atmosphere is so warm and friendly. I am thrilled to have this facility so close to home and easy to access."

The Penny George Institute is located with the Virginia Piper Cancer Institute at Unity in partnership with Minnesota Oncology, a Multicare Associates primary care and specialty clinic, and Sister Kenny Rehabilitation Institute's cancer rehabilitative services.

Therapeutic Yoga

YOGA FOR BACK PAIN

Yoga has been proven to be very successful in helping reduce back pain. This course is intended to help alleviate back pain caused by habitual patterns of chronic sitting, lack of strength and asymmetry from overuse of particular muscle groups. Using gentle asana (easy movements and postures), breath awareness and deep relaxation, students will learn how to alleviate chronic pain by strengthening different muscle groups, bringing more circulation to the back and by creating more functional movement patterns. Practices will be equally divided between upper back and lower back conditions. The course is not intended to address serious back conditions such as herniated discs, spinal fusions or advanced scoliosis. If you have had a surgery or have suffered from serious conditions, a doctor's recommendation is strongly advised. You will receive two home practices to help create a healthier back, and a home practice will be strongly encouraged.

BODY COMPOSITION ANALYSIS

Body fat levels that are too high or too low can place your health at risk. But how do you know what your ideal weight is? A scale alone will not provide adequate information. You need to understand how much of your weight is lean muscle and how much is fat. Body fat analysis is helpful to both those who are new to exercising or who have an established routine. Once someone begins an exercise program, they may see a change in appearance without weight loss. Typically, this is due to a loss of spacious fat and a gain in compact muscle. The only way to know for certain is to have your body fat levels measured. The body composition analysis is conducted by a trained exercise physiologist using a variety of methods, such as the skin fold caliper method and state-of-the-art Bod Pod technology, which is highly accurate. Following completion of your assessment, you will receive your results and recommendations for ideal goals.

BODYGEM™ RESTING METABOLISM TESTING

Do you know how many calories you should eat and burn during exercise on a daily basis? This reading, along with additional calculations relating to your daily activity levels, will allow us to accurately assess your daily caloric needs. This is vital for anyone who wants to lose weight or maintain an ideal body fat goal. A licensed nutrition expert or exercise physiologist will administer the test, decipher the results and help you create a realistic action plan to achieve your goals.
